DAILY STATION NEWS LETTER

Lochearnhead 2017

THOUGHT FOR THE DAY Speak in such a way that others listen to you. Listen in such a way that people speak to you.

Thanks for dropping in

Before continuing on their way along the "Rob Roy Way" our friends from Luxembourg joined us for flag break feeling a lot happier and, more importantly, A LOT DRIER.

Yesterday was a chance for the adults to have a break from the station as both the kitchen and admin staff visited Killin to observe the local Highland Games. Photos courtesy Janet Conder and James Dunham.

Wednesdays Activities

Death defying heights and excruciating pain sums up teams A & B's activities yesterday. Scaling vertically challenging walls was a speciality of ours, but when it came to real heights we're as useful as the suncream that we packed for this trip. The mens screams were only capable of being heard by the most sensitive canine ears, and the possibility of them playing any part in conceiving a child has been dramatically decreased. The best part was watching the colour drain from the faces of those participating, whilst staring down at the lengthy drop where we were most probably about to end up as small jam spots at the bottom. It was fun.

Florence

We didn't step on any part of grass that wasn't wet because we could never find a path.

Lots of rain, I got completely soaked. Plenty of mountain walks. Brilliant views!!!! Glad to get in the dry back at the station but I thoroughly enjoyed the walks we went on (even if my feet were completely soaked).

AND FINALLY Patrol A won the Sweetshop Quiz last night by a landslide compared to Patrol B but they did make a comeback on the Number Quiz so both have earned their teams a 'lochodile' on the weekly points board. Also, only 1 day left to complete Scavenger Hunts and party pieces!
